

The ideal location for this would be a dimly lit room. If within the budget the room would emulate a Victorian haunted house, with crown molding on the walls, spiderwebs, and old furniture. The room should be fairly quiet, with some eerie music playing.

As for hardware, I would need two things specifically. I would need some sort of touch-sensitive TV screen. Here's one of the cheaper ones I found, Tycotouch, that's $900. Then I would need a webcam, like this $20 Logitech webcam.

Then for immersion, the main thing that I need is a fancy frame to make it seem like a mirror. This could be found at a thrift store and taken from an old painting. I estimate this to cost around $25. From then if the budget allows, breakaway glass scattered around the floor, led lights behind the screen, and plastic mirrors around the room would help create the vibe.

The essential items would cost around $945 and the set dressing would cost around $32 for a total of $977 to install.
